RICHARDS-WILCOX CONVERTING FACTORY INTO EMERGENCY BED MANUFACTURER TO HELP COMBAT THE CORONAVIRUS CRISIS

Aurora, Ill. — Richards-Wilcox, a legacy company founded in 1880, is transforming its 365,000 square-foot metal fabricating factory into an emergency bed critical response manufacturer. In partnership with MOONLIGHT SLUMBER, Inc., Richards-Wilcox is working tirelessly to create temporary beds for medical, overflow and quarantine facilities, in an effort to help the world respond to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Richards-Wilcox has worked swiftly to combine their expertise and considerable manufacturing resources to offer a tangible response to the Coronavirus emergency. Within 72 hours of Governor J. B. Pritzker’s executive order requiring Illinois to “Shelter-in-Place,” and within 24 hours of New York’s announcement to turn the Javits Convention Center into a 1,000-bed hospital, Richards-Wilcox is now fully equipped to produce emergency beds for hospitals, short-term medical facilities, shelters and other venues that require beds to care for patients. Beds will be ready for shipment as early as next week.

This decisive action is not new to Richards-Wilcox, which is known for its manufacturing heritage.

“We were very involved in aiding the efforts of our military in World War II – and this is no different,” Richards-Wilcox’s president Bob McMurtry recalled. “We have the ability and desire to help fill the need for temporary beds, so it was a simple decision. Our entire company is fully committed to doing our part to help the world face this unprecedented challenge."
